WELCOME TO DUNBRIDGE

Dear Angler,

By now you will have arrived and I hope you are relaxing over a cup of coffee and enjoying our new fishing cabin.

I know it is a little bit of a walk from the parking but I hope you agree the location is stunning.

Here is a summary of the fishing and what to expect; have a lovely day.

The River Dun flows through the counties of Wiltshire and Hampshire. The Dun rises in Wiltshire to the south-east of Salisbury near West Grimstead, and flows east into Hampshire before joining the River Test at Kimbridge, ultimately draining to the Solent.

For those of you who like a little bit of industrial archaeology, take a look into the wood on your right as you head along the road to The Mill Arms for the remains of the Southampton to Salisbury Canal.

The canal bed can be seen in the wood and it fills with water in the winter. During construction of the canal sections of the river were diverted to accommodate the waterway which explains why the river is dead straight downstream of our beat. Lock 2 was sited in the garden of the current day Dunerley Cottage which was built on the site of the lock keepers house.

The use of the canal was short-lived as the company went bankrupt with the advent of the railway that followed much the same route.

A few years ago in a survey of all the Test tributaries, the Dun came out as the best for wild trout, with the densest population of juvenile fish and adults on the way to breeding.

In truth I think many of us were surprised by the result; the tributaries higher up the valley like the Anton or Dever might have been more obvious candidates.

My best guess is that is that the deep pools and undercut bends are perfect hiding places for a growing trout.

About the Dunbridge fishing

The new cabin is close to the top of the beat, so my advice is to head to the bottom of the beat to start fishing.

Downstream of the wooden footbridge: Cross the footbridge to the opposite bank; the end of the beat is a concrete bridge with a steel handrail which is about 75 yards downstream. The best way to reach the start is on foot; cross the wooden footbridge in the garden, turn right downstream until you reach the concrete bridge.

A few yards up from start of the beat

The first section is dark and deep, really hard to spot the fish unless they come within a few inches of the surface, but there are many good, big fish lurking around the bridge. As you move up the river it gets shallower, with more visible gravel and then deepens again until you reach the wooden bridge you crossed earlier.

Upstream of wooden footbridge: From here you are on the left hand bank until the top of the beat. The section from the wooden bridge to the next bend is the most amazing fish holding spot; I have had days when we have barely needed to move from here, but there is plenty of fishing further up so do move on when you have had your fill.

Upstream to the footbridge

However, the fish are not always easy to spot at Dunbridge. The dark bottom combined with more depth than you might expect (we are caught out sometimes when weed cutting!) means it is tempting to pass by spots you might otherwise regard as fishless.

To this point when there is no surface action lightly weighted nymphs will prove very effective. It is worth remembering that some of the bends are very deep, as much as 4-6ft so try a long tippet and let the nymph go deep and knock along the tree roots. Unfortunately, you will get snagged from time-to-time, but the rewards can be worth the risk.

Looking upstream to Ricketty Bench pool

Resuming our journey up the beat from the pool above the wooden bridge the river does an S turn, past the thatched shelter and then gets very shallow for 150 yards. Any fish will tend to be on the far bank, until you reach the next sharp bend that turns to the left, with a rickety bench on the corner of the pool - this is a great spot.

Looking down to Rickety Bench pool

Above Rickety Bench pool is a wide, straight section which is mostly shallow. With a high bank this is one of the easier places to spot fish, though your view will be obstructed by the alder bushes that line your bank. It is under here that the bigger fish hide. Depending on the time of day, the smaller fish move onto the gravel shallows to feed, but you will rarely see the big fish outside the deeper sections. Even then you often have to wait 10-15 minutes for them to show themselves.

Next is a section that is similar to that below the Rickety Bench pool in that there is a thick line of alders on the opposite bank, where the flow is at its darkest and deepest. A good spot for a speculative dry fly that sometimes has surprising results. The river then curves sharp left with two undercuts beneath large trees on the fishing bank. These are really hard to get a good drift through, but worth persisting.

As the river turns right you are back at the cabin. Above you have some 50 yards to go. The wide shallow section doesn't hold much in the middle, down the bank edges are best. Crossing the little railway sleeper bridge is a fast holding pool ahead and the final shaded few yards are always worth exploring.

The beat ends at the fence where a small stream enters on our bank.
